GE, Constellation Energy, Black & Veatch
Lead List of Recent “Joins” at CMAA

General Electric Company, Constellation Energy and Black & Veatch are among the latest organizations to join the Construction Management Association of America.

GE and Constellation Energy (a Fortune 125 energy company based in Baltimore) are large owners of ongoing construction programs, while Black & Veatch is one of America’s leading engineering services companies. Their decisions to join CMAA reflect the association’s expanding focus on serving owner needs as well as the interests of professional Construction Management service providers large and small.

“It’s testimony to the industry recognizing the value of CMAA, especially to owners,” said Bruce D’Agostino, CMAA President & CEO. “Members want our certification and professional development opportunities. They use CMAA to stay up to date with new developments in the CM market. And CMAA bridges the gap between owners and CMs, giving them a platform to discuss issues together.”

Membership continues to grow at an accelerating rate, nearly doubling the 2004 membership total of 2,600 with current membership just over 4,800.

CMAA now has nearly 900 owner and owner-practitioner members, while the “large corporate” membership category now includes some 50 firms with over 1,000 members.

Other new corporate and owner members include:

Ahtna Engineering Services
Hansen Company Inc.
Dudek, Inc
